Gordon Craig Gets Tough With G. Bernard Shaw

Says "Sage of Whitehall" is Not Never Will be an Artist"

Canadian Press
LONDON, Dec. 1.—G. Bernard Shaw's recent preface to the Ellen Terry letters was written in a book a year ago, "Terry and Her Secret Self," recently published.

Mr. Craig refers to Mr. Shaw as "that sage of Whitehall" and says who "is not an artist—never was and never will be."

On the first page Mr. Craig writes: "I had not wished to write this book. Ellen Terry's letters are the most famous of the most famous in Drama—indeed—my one, by writing, could add nothing to what is already possible they could detract from it. And so I left it alone."

Through his blind vanity and jealousy, has done: first, permitting the publication of the correspondence; then himself and Ellen Terry: second, a Preface in which he describes her as "not one to salute, but to insult the gods."

UNFORTUNATE WAY

"I cannot help it. It is his unfortunate way."

In regard to the publication of the letters, he writes: "Poor nothing can you do with a book like this. The rest of the book is devoted to a series of transcriptions of letters which become delightfully alive in one paragraph after another."

Mr. Craig has been saluted with the attacks directed at Mr. Shaw. The author of "Pygmalion" has found in a pocket attached to the cover a latter sampled in which the writer returns to the attack. Here he writes:

IF IT WILL HELP ALBERTA THE EDMONTON BULLETIN IS FOR IT

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 1

CONFIRMING THE TITLE

Herman Treille has again won the grand championship for wheat at Chicago; along with the first awards for flax seed, timothy seed and field peas. This is his second consecutive victory, and the third that he has won.

This clinches the claim that Mr. Treille did not win by a "fluke" on former occasions, and that it was not by accident that two of the world's champion agriculturists came to the Peace River section of Alberta.
"Flukes" and "accidents" do not happen with such regularity.

Behind these successive wins lie years of patient and persevering effort in study, selection and breeding, reflected in many decisions sometimes disheartening to the limit. And not even this relentless pursuit of excellence could have succeeded had it not been that northern Alberta is the best wheat country in the world.

PLenty FAST ENOUGH

Canada's population is now stated officially to be somewhere in the neighborhood of 10,360,000. So after all the hullabaloo about the "exodus" during the early years of the decade, the Dominion added 1,566, 000 to its total population in ten years. That is a growth of more than one per cent, or an average of one per cent per year.

In the light of present circumstances, it is clear that this rate of gain was plenty fast enough. The last two years have given us all cause to be thankful that hitherto we have not run up to, or to more extensively than they were during the preceding two or three years to bring an influx of people from Europe. As a matter of fact our unemployment total has borne a remarkable proportion to the number of newcomers who landed on our shores in the two seasons immediately preceding the general slump in conditions. Had fewer comes to the North, and more had been fewer to seek jobs, that had to be given or which relief had to be given.

That is the moral that Canadians should draw from the census returns. If they remember it they will have less cause for worry when the next depression comes along.

"ON THEIR OWN"

The newly-enacted Statute of Westminster came into effect today. This gives the sanction of law to the equality among British dominions which was not attained at the Imperial Conference in 1926. The broad meaning is that no law passed by the parliament of Great Britain shall have authority over another self-governing dominion of the parliament of that dominion so orders.

The parliament at Westminster is no longer in any sense or particular the lawmaker for the Empire, but only for Great Britain and Ireland, and the colonies and dependencies which have not attained self-government. The parliaments of the other dominions are as completely responsible for the legal safeguards and protection of their peoples as is the parliament at Westminster for the laws which govern the lives and conduct of the people living in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The passing of this act does not make history. The history will come when the Conference gave to the Balfour declaration that the self-governing states in the Empire were "free and equal." The statute only makes recognition of that principle and translates it into law.

The promptness with which the measure was passed through the British parliament and given the Royal Assent shows that there was no disposition to hedge or to "hedge" the assumption of full authority by the parliaments of the oversea dominions. On this, as on former occasions, Britain has been found quite ready to admit that the dominions are "on their own" as the dominions were to state in their claim.

A WIDE DISTRIBUTION IS BEST

The end of the week found the new Dominion loan about two-thirds subscribed.
It should have been taken up entirely the day it was put on the market. The amount was relatively small, the bond apparent, the security the best, and the interest rate high. That this did not occur cannot be attributed to any lack of money in the market, but to the fact that any doubt that the bonds were good buying.

What evidently happened is that the

The Timid Soul

small investor left it to the large investor to take up the issue! perhaps thinking it would be subscribed so quickly in Montreal and other centres that it was useless for him to send along an application. In any case, the buying during the week was done by the large investors, and the result was a flood of applications at the week-end. Was the result of the public at large coming into belief?

One reason for this delay is that the issue was not advertised sufficiently in advance. A week before the bonds were placed on sale it was not known definitely whether any particular bond or what the interest rate would be. The circumstances calling attention to the issue were published the same day the subscription books were opened. Canada is too large a country for this quick-order method to produce the general interest that is needed when a national bond issue is offered.

There was never a doubt that the bonds would be bought. But while getting the money in the first consideration in hand, there were other objects that should also be kept in mind. It is for many reasons preferable to distribute national securities as widely as possible over the Dominion, and among people in the various provinces.

In proportion to what is done, Canadians will be made to feel that this is their country, and will be given a direct personal interest in its financial affairs.
When a national loan is required, care should be taken to hit for the largest possible number of buyers, by giving the issue plenty of advance publicity.

DANNY FINDS GREAT RICHES

Closely the heels of Baby Coon ran Danny Meadow Mouse. Baby was not far behind. Danny had never run so fast in his life, and now there was no need of running. But baby Coon was not far behind. Baby Meadow Mouse that Danny had to run in order to get away from Baby Coon. "It is very much farther," panted Danny. "I have run a long distance. I have travelled a very long way, though it is not far."

"Not much," replied Baby Coon, looking down at his little short-legged friend. "A little," confessed Danny, and then he was silent. Baby Coon was for hunting adventure. Is it not true that one likes to admit that he has been hunting? It is especially true of little people. Baby Coon was silent.

"You wait here a minute while I go see if the way is clear," said Baby Coon.

"All right," replied Baby Coon. "I'll be back in a minute, and then there is nothing more for you to say about."

"Don't worry," retorted Danny stoutly. "Let's see. I can't imagine such riches as you have told me. It is not far."

Baby Coon didn't say anything. He just started Danny heading close to his heels. In a few minutes they passed over a hill, and then Baby Coon stopped. They were following a little path, whereupon he suddenly stopped, and then Danny Meadow Mouse was on the way.

Once under the fence they were on the edge of a great open space with only a little grass here and there and a few small bushes. But the joy of that feast!

"Finally I spoke. "It is as good as I told you it would be?" he asked.

"All right," replied Baby Coon. "Return to the path. I am going to try to see any more of the Great World."

He had learned his lesson, and so he went on the path for a meadow mouse to go in out of the meadow. Baby Coon paused and looked back.

"What's the matter? Are you afraid?"

"No," replied Danny Meadow Mouse.

"I'm not afraid. I was just thinking."

Not for the world would he have admitted that he was afraid. He fled after Baby Coon. Baby led the way to something big and tall covered in a green coat. It was a tree, and the night wind panted. It was a shock of corn. They were in Farmer Brown's cornfield.

"Good-bye," mumbled Baby Meadow Mouse.

READERS' BEAUTY QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Dear Miss Leeds, I would like to know the most becoming way to wear my eyelashes. I have found that when the eyelashes make them become brittle and break off, it is inadvisable to pull them out and 17 years old.

HOPE.

Answer—The right side of the hair is the best. Wave the hair in large loops, large waves with one or two dips over the forehead. The waves should be in the brow how the part. The large left-hand waves and then comb at the right angles with the part and pose the hair. The waves should be of hair falls over the left side of the forehead. The waves should be in the way of the right side over the top of the ear, leaving part of the top of the ear. The hair should be worn wavy and wavy and worn every other comb with the ends next to the head, with the ends of the hair in curves. (2) It is not necessary to comb the hair every day. Lashes too often, and it is not necessary in the daytime. (3) It is not necessary to comb the hair for evening wear, and it should be removed with soap and water. (4) The hair should be left on the eyelashes overnight in order to get into the right way. The make-up used on the eyelashes will make them brittle and break off. (5) How much hair is left at the time of age is between 115 and 125 pounds.
